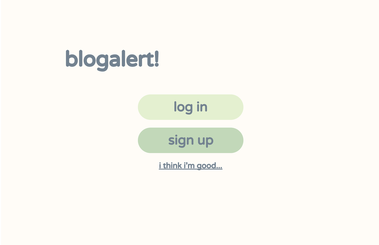
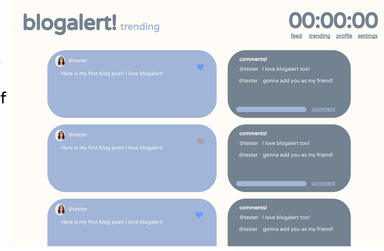
This is the first page that shows up when you access blogalert!
Here you are presented with three options, you can choose to
1. log in
2. sign up
3. access the site as a visitor



This is the Trending Page. The trending page is accessible by both registered and unregistered users.

The trending page has the most popular blog posts of that day. On the right-hand side users can view the comments corresponding to the blog post and add their own. Additionally users can like posts if desired.

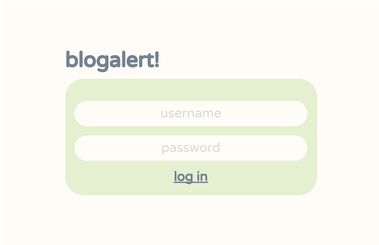
However, the liking and commenting function is limited to registered users



This is the Post pop-up. This pop-up only becomes available when the countdown reaches 00:00:00

This is where users are able to post their blog of the day. They will have 30 minutes once the countdown has reached 00:00:00 to write the blog and post it!

If you choose to log in, this is the log in screen that is presented.



This is the Profile Page. For registered users, they can view how their profile looks. Additionally from this page, users can click the "find friends" option to find other users.

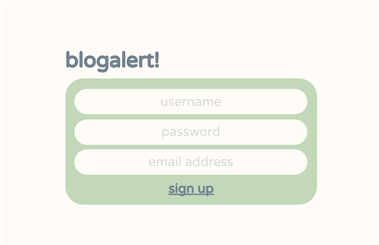
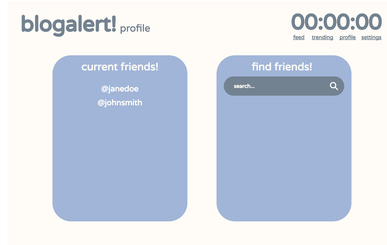
Users can edit their username, Name, password, bio and social media handle

If you choose to sign up, this is the sign up screen that is presented.



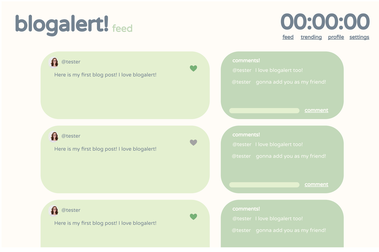
If the user clicked "find friends" on the profile page, this is the next page they are presented with. Here they can view a list of their current friends or search for more using usernames.



For users who have either logged in or signed up, the next screen presented is the feed screen.

The feed screen shows blog posts by users that the logged in user is friends with. The user is able to like the blog posts presented.

Additionally on the right-hand side, each blog post had comments presented. The user can read the comments or add one themselves. Users can also like posts if desired.



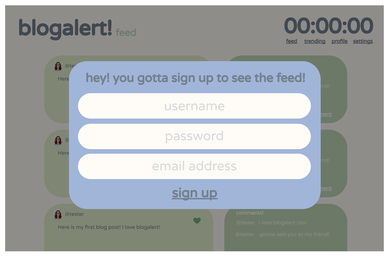
This is the Profile Page but in a different view. Registered users can click on someone's username to view their profile. In this case, they are friends (indicated by the "friends!")

Users may also unfriend someone by clicking unfriend

This is the Profile Page but in a different view. Registered users can click on someone's username to view their profile. In this case, they are not friends (indicated by the "befriend?") so a user can now add this individual as a friend

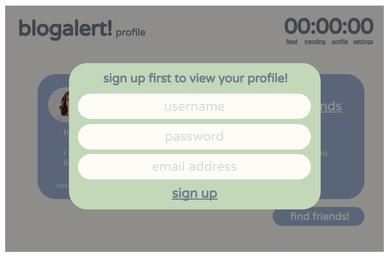
Unregistered users are unable to view the feed page. If feed is clicked through the navigation bar, users will be prompted with a signup pop-up allowing them to sign up

After sign up, users will be able to view the feed



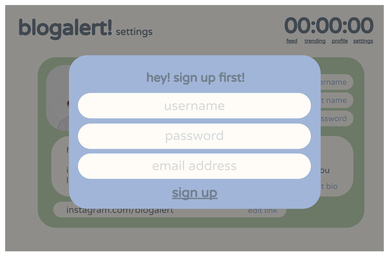
Unregistered users are unable to view the profile page as they have no profile to view. If profile is clicked through the navigation bar, users will be prompted with a signup pop-up allowing them to sign up

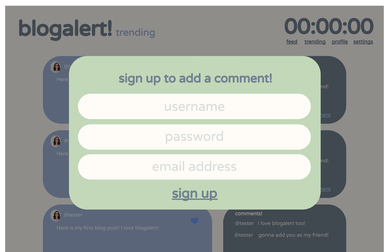
After sign up, users will be able to then view their profile



Unregistered users are unable to view the settings page as they have no profile to view. If settings is clicked through the navigation bar, users will be prompted with a signup pop-up allowing them to sign up

After sign up, users will be able to change their profile settings



Unregistered users are unable to comment on blog posts available for view on the trending page. If the "comment" button is selected, users will be prompted with a sign up pop-up allowing them to sign up


After sign up, users will be able to comment on any posts
